There are a German, an American and an Italian man.
It may seem the beginning of a funny joke, but it is a true story.
A timeless story; timeless as its three main characters, as what moves them, as what they are running away from.
Three clown-soldiers, survivors from all wars of history, who come driving their military jeeps into our squares, on the stages of our theatres, anywhere there is someone waiting for them, to erect a war memorial for every war and remember how much stupidity there has been in history.
So, even if to our eyes these clowns are stupid, with all their weaknesses, naiveties and funniness typical of clowns, we turn out to be the actual stupid people, never learning from history, always forgetting everything.
That's why memorials have to be erected for eternal memory, not to forget.

But if it happens that they are the ones to surrender to the vice they are exposing while raising their warning to history, then everything becomes confused and we end up laughing at the stupidity of stupidity, among classic and surprising gags, misunderstandings and betrayals, watching with our usual eyes the clowns' naivety and the man's weakness, to laugh at both in a play and to think again about it on our way home, maybe in front of the tv or while watching the usual TV news.
